There is a strange unnerving silence about the start of 2012. As we previously forecasted in our NEWSLETTER HERE The start of 2012 is merely a continuation of the “bridging of events” that we hinted at back in 2011.

Death, famine, and countries on the verge of financial collapse are sick of the lies coming from their leaders and with the help of social media sites such as Facebook, twitter and many other others, people especially in the Middle East are starting to wake up in droves and are taking action against those who are in charge.

People seem to underestimate their power in large numbers. But you only have to look at what has happened in the Middle East over the last few months to realize people are now starting to catch on to the massive effect they are having on their people and changes in government. They are willing to risk it all and even their own life for the protection and freedom of their fellow man. An incredible act in a time of need and desperation. The waking up we have been talking about has finally made top news headlines around the world.

Do not be surprised to see this WAKING UP and viral movements on social media sites to increase in 2012. The changes we see in the coming years are not just shifts in the financial world. They are also to do with social aspects as more people wake up and their situations change. When major financial events take hold, it is inevitable that there has to be a shift in the mentality of people along with this. That is why the waking up has already started. Subconsciously, people are preparing themselves mentally (whether they realize it or not) for the massive financial devastation coming soon. This is such a complex topic that complete books have been written just on this one topic.

What we are saying is that the mentality of everyone will soon change as people experience the current Economic collapse in their own way. Many people will be affected differently; however the social shifts coming are quite obvious as you see the Middle East crisis intensify in the coming months.

We are seeing many major events that will result from the revolution going on in the Middle East, but first expect more people in the Middle East young and old to “rise up” against their leaders and oppressors. Just months ago Gadaffi paid the ultimate price for maiming and killing his own people, and ironically he died by their own hands.

Just like Gadaffi, we do see the Syrian president being forced out of government. We would not be surprised to see him taken to trial and put on the stand for more war crimes and stories that have been hidden from the Syrians.

Current trends are indicating more leaders will be overthrown in the Middle East. People with nothing and who have been vilified, will force their leaders out of power. Syrians right now are starting to realize the power of their own voice, and voting power. It is more potent and powerful than they realize. More voices will be heard, and more people will wake up, and it is likely that President al-Assad will then be advised he has no other options and forcefully be removed. These leaders normally go kicking and screaming like a misbehaving child, however they only care about themselves and the power and control they have.

These tyrants have had their day in the sun, and there are many political changes coming for the people in the Middle East. There is a real power struggle right now between good versus evil. We all know that good normally prevails, but not without an intensive fight by the villains.

WHERE WILL IT ALL END?

Many of our subscribers have been asking about the current Middle East crisis. Will it die down? Or will things really intensify? Well, that is a good question. However, we are thinking the latter. When we look back to past uprisings in the Middle East that are this large in scale, they almost always lead to some type of significant military event, terrorist activity or even a WAR.

What you have to realize is that the Revolution happening in the Middle East right now, does have a darker side. People are seeing major positive changes for their people and their governments, but in the background People are suffering, there is death, starvation and the emotions of people right now are on edge.

When leaders and governments are overthrown authorities have to work out how to create a specific "order out of chaos". Getting things back to normal, takes times and for a brief period things seems to be out of sync, while new laws and new governments are being formed and sworn in. This can be an erratic time, and can have serious consequences.

The tensions in the Middle East right now are telling us that there is likely to be some type of military event take hold in the coming years. We also have to remember that historically many wars have taken place at the same time the economy was collapsing. While you are reading this and thinking this is all starting to sound like doom and gloom let us be the first to remind you that no matter what, there are many ways you can actually thrive financially and also profit no matter if these events play out or not.

We always try to keep our members two steps ahead in our NEWSLETTER HERE

Right now, we are telling our subscribers to keep calm and just prepare any way you can and with whatever means necessary. The real shifting of sands will start to occur if our forecasts of the US dollar, global markets, and economy come to fruition. It is always wise to prepare for the worst and hope for best.

Thankyou for taking time to read our latest trends alert update.

Sincerely,

John S.
